Today is my mom's birthday. Last night my dad still didn't have a present to give her, so he asked me what he should get her. "How about a deck of cards?" I suggested. My dad said we already had enough of those at home. "Wouldn't mom like to have an orchestra of musicians play her music, maybe even surprise her at work?" was my next idea. Dad just shook his head and thought some more. In the end, he bought her a huge, beautiful bouquet of flowers. Mom loved them!

I've been having some very interesting dreams lately. The dream I had last night was definitely the most bizarre, though! First of all, I walked into my classroom to find a class full of adults, not kids like me! After the bell rang, a mob of fans ran through the hallways yelling, "School is fun! School is awesome!" A group of ten principals politely asked the mob of fans to leave the school after that. Lastly, the day ended with a panel of judges giving grades to all of the adult students. I'm really glad my dreams are just dreams!

Bob and Maria went to a concert. They were part of the crowd of crazy fans. Maria couldn't wait for the singers to come on stage. During the show a bunch of lights and smoke filled the air, making it difficult for Bob to see the band of musicians. However; they still enjoyed the concert. They knew all but a couple of songs that were played.
